2.

The larynx is an organ in the neck that produces sound through the vibration of the vocal folds. It is located in the anterior part of the neck, just above the trachea. The larynx is composed of several cartilages, including the thyroid cartilage, which is the most prominent one, forming the Adam's apple. The trachea, or windpipe, is located below the larynx and is responsible for carrying air to and from the lungs. It is supported by a series of cartilaginous rings that prevent it from collapsing. The larynx and trachea are both part of the respiratory system.
